He was born in Brooklyn on November 20, 1839. At the age of 15 he was studying law in the office of Lewis Hurst at 14 Wall street and striving to support himself and his mother by copying the court records at night. The deputy clerk of the United States Circuit Court, then in the old Stevens Building, at Murray street and College place, advertised for a messenger and Shields got the job. He picked up a dollar here and there at the copying and in that way laid the foundation of an acquaintance with procedure in the Federal courts that was regarded as remarkable.
